Malta Trip by Defense Aide

After Getting New Mintoff Message LONDON, July 14 (UPI).—The British government today abrupt-ly postponed at the last moment mission by Defense Secretary Lord Carrington to Malta to find out what terms the island's new Socialist prime minister, Dom Mintoff, proposes for a new defense agreement.

A Foreign Office spokesman said that Lord Carrington was aboard a Royal Air Force plane about to take off when the government received a message from Mr. Mintoff.

The Foreign Office refused to disclose the contents of the mes-sage. But the spokesman said the government ordered Lord Carrington to postpone his departure while it considered the contents of the message. The spokesman said that no new date had been set for Lord Carring-ton's mission. Lord Carrington was to have flown to Malta to discuss a new agreement permitting British troops to continue to be stationed on the strategic Mediterranean island. Under the existing agreement, which has about three more years to run, Malta receives about £5 million in aid annually from Britain for the right to station troops and air force planes on the island.

Unofficial reports have said that Mr. Mintoff now wants Britain to pay about £13 million annually.

Thieu Uses 'Dictatorial' Rule To Stifle Opposition, Ky Says

By Alvin Shuster

SAIGON July 14 (NYT) — Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky accused President Nguyen Van Thieu today of using "dictatorial practices" to silence the opposition, muzzle the press and assure his own re-election this fall, In his sharpest attack on President Thieu, issued in the form of a letter, Mr. Ky charged that the president had failed to achieve his objectives in four years in office, that democratic institutions have been abused and corrupted, that Vietnamese society has been weakened and that "the basic rights of the citizens are under serious threat of annihilation." He said that Mr. Thieu has "an excessive attachment to power."

Mr. Ky, who again said he would challenge the president at the polls on Oct. 3, is now trying to meet the requirements to make the race. Under a Thieu-backed law, a presidential hopeful needs the endorsement of either 40 of the 195 legislators in the National Assembly or 100 of the approximetely 550 city and provincial councillors in South Vietnam. According to Mr. Ky's aides, the vice-president has received pledges of support from about 100 councillors, but they charge that provincial chiefs, who are appointed by the president, are hesitant in validating the endersements. The signatures must be obtained and validated by Aug. 3.

Apart from the political implications of the Ky charges, the letter underscores how far the rift between the two men has widened since they joined forces in 1967 at American insistence. The marriage of convenience of four years ago has reached the stage of a final divorce of substantial bitterness.

"You promised to resolve the war," the vice-president wrote to Mr. Thieu, "yet more than ever we are locked in a situation of war with no end in sight. You promised social reforms, but our society is fraught with un-precedented injustice and corruption while the soldiers, the civil servants and the unprivileged citizens are condemned to a life of destitution unknown to this date."

Now, Mr. Ky continued, Mr. Thieu has embarked on a new campaign—a blatant attempt to fix the elections. He also charged that the president was exerting pressure on the legislators and local council members to prevent them from sponsoring opposition candidates. The vice-president thus joined the other potential challenger. Gen. Duong Van (Big) Minh, in accusing Mr. Thieu of attempting to rig the elections. The retired general, who is gathering his endorsements from the legislators, has also alleged that the presi-dent was using the power of his office for "dishonest maneuver:

News Analysis

Palestinian Cause Declining As Arafat Loses Charisma

By William Tuohy

is anyone's guess.

But most neutral observers think Yassir Arafat's ability to tighten up the Palestinian guerrilla organization and provide effective leadership—either on the military or political side—will determine the viability of the movement in the critical months

CAIRO, July 14.—Three years ago, when the Palestinian guerrilla movement was building up a full head of steam, its most prominent figure, Yassir Arafat, told his followers: "Please, no personality cult. I am only a soldier. Our leader is Palestine."

Despite his plea, something of a personality cult did envelop Mr. Arafat, who led the big el-Fatah guerrilla organization, and it continued to intensify until about a year ago. Today, however, the personality cult so longer exists. And when Mr. Arafat was re-clected chairman of the Executive Committee of the Palestinian National Council here, little genuine enthusiasm was expressed by the delegates. Much of the steam has leaked out of the guerrilla movement, and the leader has suffered a corresponding drop in esteem among the Arab masses.

As a former fighting chieftain and a man unquestionably dedicated to the Palestinian cause, Mr. Arafat is still widely admired. But the old adulation is no longer

In a way he has ceased to be the romantic, charismatic fighter figure and in his mid-40s has become, in the eyes of the masses, just another Arab politician. When he strides through the lobby of a big hotel, accompanied by his mini-retinue, heads of passersby no longer turn; no applause rings out as it once did. Even his ever-present stubble beard, his fatigue clothing, and his gun belt all seem rather affected in the chambers of the Arab League headquarters, where the Palestinian council meets. "He tried too hard to be like movie star," grumbled one Palestinian.

For despite his rakish get-up, it has been quite a while since Mr. Arafat personally shared the rigors of life in the field with the Arzb guerrillas, and this fact is not lost on informed Arabs.

This, however, is no reflection on his bravery or tactical skillwhich have been demonstrated in the past. Rather, it seems a harsh fact that as the burdens of his political leadership increased, his military skills and reputation began to fade.

The Arab countries have lagged in their payments to the Pales-tinian guerrilla groups, and so have individual Palestinians in their "taxes"

Under Mr. Arafat's leadership, el-Fatah became the umbrella under which most politically moderate Palestinians rallied. But he was always attacked by the Marxist-oriented militants as being a Palestinian "Uncle Tom" and not radical or violent enough. But perhaps his biggest weakness, in the view of Middle East observers, was his attempt to provide personally both the political and military leadership of the Palestinian Liberation Or-

"He never made up his mind whether to be the military leader, who needs secrecy, or the political leader who needs publicity," says one analyst, "and so he benefited from neither role."

The military arm of the Palestinian guerrillas despite an occasional dramatic attack—is more ineffective now than at any time since the 1967 war. And Mr. Arafat has, observers believe, nearly exhausted himself in trying to reconcile the unreconcilables—the quarreling, factions within the Palestinian movement. But since he is the only guerrilla leader acceptable to the wide spectrum of Palestinian political coloration, he has been forced to play a role that many believe was doomed to failure, or at least to lack of success. "He came to far, too fast," says

Bengalis' Culture and Lives Are Both Being Snuffed Out

The following dispatch was written by a correspondent of The New York Times who was expelled from East Pakistan on June 30.

By Sydney H. Schanberg

NEW DELHI, July 14 (NYT).—
Army trucks roll through the halfdeserted streets of Dacca, capital of East Pakistan, these days, small minority of Bengali Moscarrying "anti-state" prisoners to work sites for hard labor. Their heads are shaved, and they wear no shoes and no clothes except for shorts—all of which makes escape difficult.

Every day at the Dacca airport planes from West Pakistan, more than 1,000 miles away across India, land troops, dressed in baggy pajama-like tribal clothing so as to be less conspicuous.

Street names are being changed to do away with all Hindu names as well as those of Bengali Moslem nationalists as part of the campaign to stamp out the Bengali culture. Shankari Bazar Road, in Dacca, is now Tikka Khan Road, after the Heutenant general who is the martial-law governor of East Pakistan and whom most Bengalis call "the butcher."

Those are just a few of the numerous things, seen by this correspondent during a recent visit to Pakistan's eastern prov-ince, that indicate the military regime there is determined to maintain its control of the region and its 75 million people.

Economy Crippled

The government is taking these measures despite the region's crippled economy, the collapse of government administratica, an intensifying guerrilla activity by Bengali separatists, mounting army casualties and an alienated, sullen population.

To ensure troop strength in East Pakistan, the government has leased two Boeing-70% from a private Irish-owned charter airline, World Airways, to carry reinforcements for its army there—estimated now at between 70,000 and 80,000 men—and replacements

In addition to the daily troop arrivals, the government is bring-ing in wave upon wave of West Pakistanis to replace East Pak-Bengali is trusted with a responsible or sensitive post; even the man who cuts the grass at Dacca airport is a non-Bengali.

The West Pakistanis are discouraging the use of the Bengali language and trying to replace it with their own, Urdu. Eban Urges U.S. to Decide On Jet Order

Cites Soviet Supplies To Egypt and Syria

JERUSALEM, July 14 (UPI) .--Foreign Minister Abba Eban to-day asked the United States to urgently decide on Israel's longstanding request for more fighter

A decision on this request is "most important and urgent in the light of the facts, which have been revealed by authoritative American sources, that the Soviet Union has been supplying aerial weapons to Egypt and Syria at a very accelerated rate," Mr. Eban said in the Knesset (parliament)

The foreign minister said that the government considered the need for a decision "a matter of top urgency.

Last week, Defense Minister Moshe Dayan said that the United States was blocking the way to peace in the Middle East by yielding to Egyptian demands to withhold warplanes from Israel. In a radio interview, the gen-eral said that "the withholding of American arms from Israel, under Egyptian pressure," was viewed by him "as an obstacle to the very holding of negotiations for a settlement."

Mr. Eban was asked in parliament if the United States had laid down any specific conditions for further supply of planes to Israel. He replied that there were ingness to meet face to face with the Soviet Union to discuss resumption of relations between the two countries, relations broken by Russia following the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

"The Israeli government has expressed on many occasions willingness to establish a dialogue with the Soviet government but until now the Soviet government has refrained from making a response." Mr. Eban said.

"Certain Soviet citizens, including journalists," he sald, "have spoken in favor of a re-newal in relations but these expressions do not commit the Sovarmy would not have followed the rebels, and that the plot leaders knew it. He said their aim was to kill the king. Meanwhile, the Libyan Ambassador, Col. Youssef Chabiani, has been put under surveillance at his home and his telephone line cut because of Libya's support for the attempted coup. The embassy remained surrounded by troops. A Moroccan spokesman denied reports in the Cairo newspaper Al Ahram that Mr. Chabiani had been formally arrested.

LOS ANGELES, July 14 (UPI).

-- Actor Robert Stack filed suit against the Columbia Broadcasting System for $25 million damages yesterday, charging a documentary depicted him as a hawk on the Vietnam war when he actually is a dove.

Mr. Stack said CBS lifted a segment of a 1968 Air Force training film in which he appeared and used it without permission in "The Selling of the Peniagon," a documentary on the public relations activities of the military. Mr. Stack said be was put in the position of backing the war when in reality he has always opposed the involvement of the United States in Vietnam. The suit also said that Mr. Stack received no payment for appearing in the film, entitled "Alone, Unarmed and Unarraid," but that the television documentary implied he got a large amount of money for the work.

Pentagon Says $1.7 Billion Has Not Vanished in Vietnam

By Dana Adams Schmidt

WASHINGTON, July 14 (NYT). fice, a congressional watching The Defense Department explained yesterday what had hap-pened to $1.7 billion in U.S. support for the government of South Vietnam that an audit by the General Accounting Office had not been able to trace.

The GAO's official findings were contained in a 160-page survey entitled, "Background In-formation on U.S. Participation in Pacification and Development Programs in Vietnam." The text of the report has not been made public but a report of the con-clusions was published in The New York Times Saturday. The funds, the Pentagon said in a four-page statement yester-day, were not missing at all; the books accounting for it were merely not kept in South Viet-nam, where the study was con-

For Regional Forces

"The largest part of the $1.7 billion, for example, about $1.3 billion," the Pentagon said, "was budgeted to provide military hardware and other commodities to the regional and popular forces under the military assistance service-funded program." It said that this fact had been recognized in the survey.

The bookkeeping for this military aid, the department said, is handled through the South Vietnamese Army, Navy or Air Force, which receive supplies from the United States and pass them on to the regional and popular forces. This part of the aid program is split up among the three armed services, the department said, but is finally recorded in the United States, where it is audited as part of military aid to South Vietnam.

Checked in U.S. The department said that no separate audit of American aid to the popular forces was kept. Aid to these forces shows in the records of American aid to the South Vietnamese armed forces and is audited in Washington, as all other aid figures are audited,

Benelux, Moscow Sign Four-Year Trade Accord

BRUSSELS, July 14 (AP).-The Soviet Union today signed a fouryear trade agreement with the three Benelux countries—Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg -marking the first time it has recognized these countries as a single trading unit. The agreement accords most-favored-nation status to both sides, provides for the settlement of payments in convertible currencies and provides for common Benelux trade envoys in Moscow. a Belgian Foreign Affairs Department spokesman said. The agreement, which expires at the end of 1974, is designed to "vastly increase" Soviet-Be-nelux trade, the spokesman said. But he denied reports that it called for a doubling of this trade. Total 1970 exports of the Benelux countries to the Soviet Union—which consist mostly of textiles, iron, steel and manu-factured goods—amounted to $53 million, while imports from the Soviet Union, largely wood, oil and fertilizers, amounted to $77

mittee of the Trades Union Congress adopted a 10,000-word document arguing that the terms of entry negotiated by the govern-ment were disadvantageous to Britain. And an anti-Market Conservative backbencher, Richard Body, called for an inquiry into the government's optimistic figures in its Common Market white paper.

Most of the questions at the Conservative conference were friendly. In replying to them, Mr. Heath rejected the Labor argument that his government had made such a mess of the economy that Britain could not afford entry. He said that Britain's position was far better than at the time of Labor's application for membership in 1967 and he added:

"I would not be necessary to have further deflation if we joined the community." Mr. Heath assured the gathering that he would not be deterred by threats voiced by Mrs. Barbara Castle, former Labor minister of employment, that any future Labor government would withdraw Britain from the The only discordant note at the

SEOUL July 14 (Reuters) -Two American soldiess—one a military policeman—and a Korean were injured in a clash last night at a camp village north of Senui. the second between American servicemen and local people in four days, a U.S. spokesman said

Last Friday about 80 Negro soldiers raided a village 40 miles south of Seoul, and in the fighting that followed ten soldiers and dozens of Koreans were injured. The spokesman said that last night's fight near Tongduchon, 25 miles from Scoul, was spontaneous and had no racial overtones. Only white soldiers were involved.

But, the former Pentagon aide said, the case of the eight Green Berets, who had been charged with the murder of a Vietnamese double agent, could be singled out as the final straw. The charges were dropped in 1963.

"I was lying in bed reading the paper when I saw the headline: Green Beret Case Charges Dropped ." Mr. Elisberg said. In the article, Mr. Resor admitted the men could not obtain a fair trial because of their involvement with the Central Intelligence

Mr. Ellaborg said this was not wholly true. There was murder involved and Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, commander of U.S. forces in Vietnam, had demanded and been promised an investiga-tion, he declared.

But Mr. Resor, he said, had acted on behalf of the Johnson administration. "The White House had made the decision. It was the first time a commander had been overruled. Abrams was mad because he was told a lie," Mr. Ellsberg said. Then I started thinking," Mr. Eitherg said, "his is the system I spent is years serving... one that would conceal murder by lying. I decided I can't be part of that anymore. I was tired of those who tell me when I should he and how I should he, And very soon after that, I made my decision." Different Story

Mr. Eliberg said he had taken the report to presidential National Security Adviser Henry A. Kissinger in September, 1970, and asked him to look at it. Mr. Kissinger said he already had a copy, Mr Elisberg said.

Mr. Rissinger said last month that he was unaware of the study until he saw the first installment m. The Times of June 13. "I don't believe that's true." Mr. Ellsberg said. "That's not what he told me in September, 1970." Mr. Ellsberg said he was not aware that he was breaking the law by turning the documents over to The Times. He has been charged with unauthorized possession of classified documents,

'A Let of Law-Breaking' "If I have broken the law, I'll go to prison for it. But there's been a lot of law-breaking over the last 25 years," he said, referring to policies made by the last live Presidents.

Mr. Elisberg blamed the press for "invariably misquoting" high government officials, including Presidents, and said the press ould closely examine its role in the controversy. "I think if the newspapers go back and go over their own reporting, they'd see how they'd report it now and see things differently," Mr. Ellsberg said. "The They don't listen to they don't want to hear."

Airing of Pentagon Papers Explained' to Soviet Public

By Bernard Gwertzman

MOSCOW, July 14 (NYT).— Soviet readers, still curious about how it was possible for several American newspapers to publish secret Pentagon papers on Viet-nam without government approval, were today given a Rube Goldberg-style explanation that reflects some current Soviet thinking about America. Literaturnaya Gazeta devoted

10 30 mm almost an entire page to a de-tailed answer to the question "Why did The New York Times begin to talk?" It accompanied the article with an illustrated map of the the United States linking the newspapers to major monopolies that it said control

The basic thesis of the article was that the Pentagon documents were published as the result of a split within the ruling American monopolies, who were united at the time the war broke out but which now are at each other's throats. This line was first expressed in general terms by Pravda two weeks ago and has been repeated in other publications since then.

Soviet Sophistication

Literaturnaya Gazeta tried to present in detail which monopolies were lined up on what side and how they were linked to the press. Many of the points made in the article represent, in a sense, sophisticated Soviet Marxist thinking on how America is ruled.

The article contended that the United States can be divided into three main economic sectors military-industrial, based in the Southwest; civil-military, located in the Northeast; and civilian, in the Northeast and Middle West, Within the mili-tary-industrial and ovil-military sectors, the paper said, there was formed a special "Vietnam sector" which reaped hig profits. But at the present time, the civilian-sector monopolists and the non-Vietnam sector of military monopolists have become starmed at falling profits and smaller government allocations and have "lost interest" in the Vietnam war. U.S. 'Contradictions'

"Only by taking into account these contradictions can one understand the important economic, political and social phenomen. in the United States and in partleular those which led to, and were connected with, the publication of the secret documents of the Pentagon by such a representative of the American monopolies as the publisher and owner of The New York Times, Arthur Sulzberger," it said. "The action by Sulzberger in no way can be regarded as unprecedented or as having anything to do with freedom of the

Mr. Sulzberger decided to print the documents. Literaturnaya Gazeta contended, because The Times—as well as other papers such as The Washington Post, the Boston Globe, the Chicago Sur-Times and the Baltimore Sun-had "very close relations with the very large old monopolies not involved in the Vietnam sector of the economy."

Civilian Sector

The papers which printed the documents were linked instead to the monopolics of the civilian sector, such as General Motors, Poxi, Standard Oil and Chrysler, which are interested mainly in foreign economic expansion in the penetration of the economies of developing countries and the development of the civilian production in the United States."

The FTC said the order requires La Saile Extension University of Chicago to "disclose the fact that the courses are not recognized or accepted as sufficient education or legal training to quality the student to become a candidate for admission to the profession of law in any state or the District of Columbia.

The school grants what it calls a bachelor-of-law degree to correspondence students who complete either an 89-lesson, threeyear course costing $550 or a 109-lesson, four-year course costing $695.

FTC chairman Miles W. Kirknatrick contended the degrees give La Salle a selling point in oral sales approaches by school representatives. He noted that most of La Salle's advertising is done on matchbook covers.

safari - which began with the drive to Treetops yesterday and ended this morning—without danger to himself or the animals. Some 45 elephants and 15 rhinoceroses and an apparently unlimited supply of water buffalo appeared at the water hole to scrounge for salt while Mr. Agnew and his 70-man entsurage watched. They had preempted the hotel from scheduled guests for the night.

Gladys Votes No

The Vice-President showed unabashed admiration for the game, and his affections were spurned only by an 18-year-old baboon named Gladys, who has been hanging around Treetops for years. At teatime on the hotel roof, Mr. Agnew nervously offered Gladys a radish, which she disdained. He then tried sugar, which she snatched from his hand with a vicious swipe.

Mr. Agnew's particular favorite was the toothy water buffalo, which staked out a few square feet of mud on the edge of the water hole about dinnertime and refused to budge for the next iew hours, despite repeated nudges and shoves by elephants and rhinos.

"She's tough," the Vice-President said.

Mr. Agnew-who was made a member of the Kikuyu tribe yesterday by President Jomo Kenyatta-clearly enjoyed himself last night. He laughed, asked countless questions and applauded when his host, Treetops owner Jack Block, made a strong plea for conservation and for a prohibition on the sale of animal skins in the United States and

Come Off It, Harold

Over a span of at least ten years three British governments have sought entry to the European Common Market and now that the Europeans have said yes. Harold Wilson, Labor party leader and the man who as prime minister made the entry bid which became the successful one, indicates he will urge his party to say no. Prime Minister Heath is virtually assured of collecting the necessary parliamentary majority anyway from the ranks of his own Conservatives, plus some Labor defectors, at the showdown in Commons expected on Oct. 28. But Mr. Wilson still retains the capability to do his country great mischief, not to say lasting harm. For the anticipated benefits of market entry will not flow easily and automatically to Britain as soon as Parliament votes. Britain will have to strive for years, even suffer in some ways, to reap those benefits. A narrow margin in Parliament indicating only a half-effort, or worse, a warning such as Mr. Wilson has made to remove Britain from the market if Labor returns to power—these could sour Mr. Heath's triumph and perhaps altogether spoil Britain's historic outreach. Then regardless of who was governing, Britain would be back where it started in 1961, except that everyone else in Europe would have moved a decade on.

If Mr. Wilson had a good case, one might he able to understand his hesitation. But his case is flabby, consisting really of little more than caving in to the unreconstructed and no doubt temporary majority in the Labor party in the name of Labor's "continuing basic unity." His own Common Market negotiator, George Thomson, has said the Heath entry terms are better than those Labor itself expected to gain. Faced with a choice between principle and party favor, Mr. Wilson seems to be toppling toward the latter. He has sought to conceal his embarrassment behind ambiguity and evidently will not be flushed out until a party conference July 28.

Prime Minister Heath, by contrast, is charging ahead. His "white paper" on the Common Market is quite up to the standards of the historic occasion which, for Britain, this unquestionably is. Briefly, the document argues that Britain, standing aloof, is being left badly behind Europe's Six, with their big preferential market, in terms of both economic growth and political influence and that it will be left further behind if it does not act now. Once in "Europe" the cost of living in the United Kingdom will go up, but the standard of living will go up more. The unions will have to change their archaic and anarchic work rules but the economy's rate of growth will rise. As a political institution and a country with its own values and traditions, moreover, Britain will remain Britain.

Quoting a former prime minister, the white paper says: "Together we can ensure that Europe plays in world affairs the part which the Europe of today is not at present playing. For a Europe that fails to put forward its full economic strength will never have the political influences which I believe it could and should exert within the United Nations, within the Western alliance and as the means for effecting a lasting detente between East and West; and equally in contributing in ever fuller measure to the solution of the world's North-South problem, to the needs of the developing world." The speaker? Harold Wilson, of course.

Moroccan Revolt

On King Hassan's own account, the attempt to overthrow his constitutional monarchy in Morocco might have succeeded if its main leader, an army general who was Minister of the Royal Household, had not been accidentally killed by a fellow rebel. As he reflects on this revolt led by a trusted general who was regarded as the most important officer in his army, the 42-year-old monarch can hardly fail to take seriously the warning of hostile Radio Libya that "the revolution is not over in Morocco."

As for Libya's Revolutionary Command Council, it seems willing-even eager-to confirm King Hassan's charge that it was involved in plotting the bloody episode that may have claimed several hundred lives. including those of three loyal Moroccan generals and Belgium's ambassador to Rabat. Libya offered aircraft and paratroopers to the rebels and is now predicting another actionary monarch."

In all this, however, the Libyans obviously have gone too far-at least for the present -for their revolutionary colleagues in other Arab countries. President Sadat of Egypt, concerned at the fend between two Arab states, sent his personal representative to Rabat, presumably with a message of support for the king. President Boumedienne of Algeria, who has had his troubles with Morocco, also sent a message of solidarity.

Thus, for the first time since it seized power in 1969, the Libyan regime may find itself odd-man-out in the Arab world. King Hassan is not a feudal monarch and is "reactionary" only if measured by extreme Arab nationalist rhetoric. He is a target of the revolutionary regimes because he maintains friendly ties with the United States and the West, refuses to enforce the boycott of Israel and criticizes the Palestinian guer-

There have been earlier plots against King Hassan, in one of which Algerian support was alleged and Syrian complicity in another. Whatever the Libyan involvement with this latest attempt, it is clear that Morocco's own officer corps is far from immune to the revolutionary winds that have blown down other traditional regimes in the Arab world. But so far King Hassan seems to have the luck-or the indestructibilityof a kindred spirit, King Hussein of Jordan. who flew to his side almost before the shooting had stopped as a gesture of solidarity and of defiance.

No Rest for Dr. Luns

For a world that takes stability for granted and government reshuffles at The Hague in stride, the cabinet sworn in by Queen Juliana last week had a striking aspectand it was not the debut of Barend Biesheuvel as premier. It was the absence from the list for the first time in 19 years of Joseph Marie Antoine Huber Luns, the world's senior foreign minister.

"The most famous and colorful Dutch minister in living memory," a London newspaper called Dr. Luns. It might have added that he was also one of the most effective. He clearly belonged to that remarkable group of post-war statesmen-Pearson of Canada, Spaak of Belgium, Lange of Norway come to mind-who were able, through vision, intelligence and hard work, to exert an influence far out of proportion to the size and strength of their countries.

Whether at the United Nations, NATO or the European Economic Community, it was impossible ever to ignore Dr. Luns-for reasons having only peripherally to do with his towering figure and a long face as unforgettable as that of Charles de Gaulle, with whom he often tangled, unawed, in flerce debate. For years, his goal has been to get Britain into the European communitles, and it was fitting that he stayed at his post until that great achievement, for which he had worked so hard, was within

But it would be unthinkable for Dr. Luns at 59 to retire from public life. He is leaving his government only to prepare for wider service in behalf of the whole Atlantic Ailiance. The Times has differed with Dr. Luns and may find occasion to differ again; but it is clear that NATO could hardly have found a more committed secretary-general. THE NEW YORK TIMES.

International Opinion

Moroccan Justice

Reports from Morocco say courts-martial have started their sad work. But it seems to us a depiorable euphemism to give the name of court to a gathering of military men, faithful to the king, who pass death sentences without detailed examination of individual responsibility, without giving the accused a chance to defend themselves. . and without the right of appeal. . .

What strikes our consciences most . . . is the spirit of vengeance which comes to the forefront on such occasions, far removed from any feeling of justice and legality. . . from a human point of view, just as we rejected the massacre (staged by the rebels), we also reject the death sentences and this swift and possibly indiscriminate reprisal which adds blood to blood.

Congress: The Separate But Unequal Branch

By Joseph A. Califano jr.

WASHINGTON,—The Congress is presently the separate but unequal branch of the federal government. Discussion in the press and on the Hill about this sorry condition has centered on the revelations in the Pentagon Papers and the role of the Congress in foreign affairs. Senators rise on the floor to place blame on the Executive branch for withholding information or intentionally misleading the Congress.

The basic reason for the decline in congressional effectiveness and status, however, lies not with the Executive branch or some icderal bureaucrats whose concern is often for the approbation of constituencies independent of the President or the Congress. Responsibility for its separate but unequal status rests largely with the Congress itself.

The judgments of the 535 members of the Congress, like anyone else's, can hardly be better than the information on which those gress is dependent upon the Executive branch for most of its information, with an occasional and too often superficial assist from outside experts. Of the three branches of the government, the Congress is the most inadequately staffed and least efficiently organized.

Computer

The Congress has a Legislative Reference Service which can put into statutory language virtually any idea any congressman wants drafted into a bill he desires to introduce. The General Accounting Office serves as an investigatory arm to expose waste in government contracts or office furnishings excessively luxurious for federal employees. Both organizations serve all congressmen well on their spheres of operation. Moreover, there are an increasing number of bright young staffers working on the Hill, particularly on the Senate side and in some key House committees. But the Congress has ignored the revolution in analytical technology. As Rep. John Culver of Iowa has pointed out, the Congress has only three or four computers, and those computers operate in large measure on payrolls and housekeeping matters. It has no central system analysis staff and only a scattering of such analysts among its committee stails, many of whom left the Executive branch after the change in administrations in 1969 and have every intention of returning to the Executive should the Democrats assume control of the White House in 1973.

Contrast the Executive branch. which now has some 4,000 computers working almost entirely on substantive policy issues. Analysts and programmers of increasing sophistication hold key staff positions not only in the Office of Management and Budget and the Department of De-fense, but increasingly in the domestic departments of the government. Shrewd and brilliant a legislator as he is, Chairman Mills must turn to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare and its computers (or a systemsoriented research center like the Urban Institute which is largely dependent on Executive branch contracts) when he wants detailed information on the financial impact of various welfare reform

The Pentagon, both within its own walls as well as in its think tanks like Rand and the Institute for Defense Analysis, can wargame any number of strategic or budgetary alternatives, while the Armed Services and Foreign Aifairs Committees still base most of their decisions on the work of small staffs and the gut reactions and empirical idiosyncrasies of committee members. The impact of this congressional failure to staff itself adequately and to take advantage of the analytical tools of modern technology is at least as responsible for the second class citizenship of the Congress among the three branches of government as the seniority system or the antediluvian committee structure.

The Executive branch is by far the most significant force in the conception, development and enactment into legislation of new substantive programs. The stark fact is that neither the Congress nor any of its committees has the consistent capability-without almost total reliance on the in-formational and analytical resources of the Executive branch -of developing coherent, largescale federal programs.

son decided in 1967 to develop a program to close the housing gap in the United States as rapidly as possible without distorting the Capital markets of the country or putting too much pressure on the construction labor force, months of computer runs and analytical work by the Conneil of Regressic Advisers and the Department of Housing and Urban Development were necessary, first to determine the size of the gap and then to produce the 10-year program for closing it. When the Housing Act of 1968 was sent to the Congress, there was little discussion of the validity of the data base of the Executive branch or its statistical and analytical projections. The Congress and its committee staffs were simply not equipped to analyze the program intelligently in these terms. Most of the discussion in the Congress involved the parochial rivalries of interest groups that had been jousting for decades in the housing arena. The congressional debate essentially constituted a scarch for some means to balance the relatively narrow interests of banks, homebuilders, real estate brokers and trade unions.

Congress, of course, is the proper forum for such interests to make their views known on a legislative program proposed by the Executive. But the Congress should also be a forum where Executive branch analyses and programs can be independently evaluated.

The Military

On the military side of the budget, the situation reached a point in the 1960s where the Pentagon would analyze and make decisions on the basis of program packages related to the capabilities of combinations of forces from all three services to meet potential threats to our national security. This is the con-text in which Secretary of De-fense Robert McNamara would present his annual posture statements. Yet, for appropriations purposes, largely because of the way the Congress is organized, the limited capability of congressional staffs and its old-fashioned appropriations procedures, these program packages would be retranslated into budgetary line

The lack of adequate staffing and analytical capability results in the kind of mest-ax approach that so often characterizes efforts to cut the defense budget. The success of a few senators in 1969 and 1970 when they focused with sophisticated specificity on select-ed programs, like Sen. Walter F. Mondale's successful attack on the Navy, was in no small meathe Congress. sure due to the expertise of former Pentagon and Budget Eureau analysts who were willing to assist the senators on the Hill and provide the data and analysis appropriate to the use of a scalpel instead of an ax on the defense

the nuclear carrier program of

The Joint Economic Committee does a remarkable job particularly when it is realized that virtually all its basic data comes from the statistical offices of the Com-merce and Labor Departments, the Council of Economic Advisers and the Federal Reserve Board. Yet, think for a moment what the altuation might be if that committee had the statistical and annividal canability to do their own computer runs, their own independent basic analyses and projections. I am not speaking here of duplicating the capability that exists in the Eureau of Labor Statistics or the Commerce Departnomics, but simply the kind of capability that exists in most of the large banks and corporations of our nation.

An Example

Many of the more sophisticated members of the Joint Economic Committee, like Sen. William Proximire and Congressman Henry Reuss, were convinced at an early stage on the basis of personal experience and shrewd perception that inflation was getting out of hand in the Johnson administration and that the Nixon economic game plan would go awry. But their conviction was ess a gut reaction. Their ability to develop their own projections and economic scenarios supported by detailed analyses and statistics, was sharply limited because they lacked the staff and the computer technology to do their own analytical thing.

Finally, and this is perhaps the most difficult and sensitive area in which to urge the Congress to engage in cold self-examination, the committee structure no longer conforms to the realities of American life. Committee jurisdictional problems are a major inhibition to a functional, problem-oriented analysis of our national problems. Senator Humphrey's proposal for a National Security Committee recognizes this in the foreign policy, military affairs and foreign aid area. But there is no visible recognition of this in the domestic area.

This issue is crisply drawn between the Executive branch and the Congress as a result of the President's reorganization proposals. The President has gested that the domestic program organized into four basic departments: Human Resources, Community Development, Economic Development and Natural Resources. The difficulties the reorganization faces stem not simply from narrow private interest groups like agriculture or business or labor, who wish to retain con-stituency - oriented departments. Even more important-as almost any congressman or senator Will admit privately-is the impact of that reorganization on congressional committee jurisdiction.

The rhetorical level of debate is filled with concerns about our farmers or our businessmen or our workingmen. The tough arguments in the Congress are more often concurred with which com mittees will handle the President's reorganization proposals. The most serious hurdle these Execulive branch reorganization proposals face may be the essentially retrogressive and parochial attitudes of substantive committees of

In its struggle to stay abreast of the Executive branch, the Con-

gress may retard more efficient Executive reorganization, rather than pursue its own reorganization to come to terms with the reality of American society and its problems in the 1970s. Thus one can hear comments that if the President's Department of Natural Resources is enacted into law, arrangements must be made to maintain the portions of the new department formerly in the Agriculture Department within the jurisdiction of the Senate and House Agriculture Committees and the portions presently in the Interior Department within the jurisdiction of the Senate and House Interior and Insular Affairs Committees or indeed to grant both committees jurisdiction over certain areas. This is something akin to those stage-coach owners who first refused to transport rail tracks and later added a brace of stallions to the coach to compete with the railroads. Most large institutions, like most governments, are more likely to deteriorate and crumble from within rather than without. Institutions, like people, tend to bring their problems on themselves. As the Congress thrashes out in frustration at its separate but unequal status among the branches of government, it must realize that its houses are made Before its members throw too many stones, they might recognize that they hold in their own hands the power to vote themselves the staff and analytical capability they need, to establish a central systems analysis and program evaluation office, to reorganize their committees and thus to assume their constitutional role as the most effective and responsive representative legislature in the history of mankind. The writer, now a member of the Washington law firm of Williams, Connolly & Califano, was President Johnson's Special Assistant for Domestic Affairs. He wrote this article for the Washington Post,

Two department officials told a Senate Appropriations subcom-mittee that after 12 years of the program, which has been the largest U.S. public safety effort in Latin America, Brazil now has the capacity to train its own federal and state police in modern

The officials said the alleged death-squad activities were "shocking" and could not be condoned,

"They represent a small seg-ment of Brazilian criminal control which could not be related to our training," said Chorles A. Meyer, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs. Mr. Meyer and Herman Kleine. deputy coordinator of the Alliance

Although they did not give the total cost of the program since it began in 1959, they said only $200,000 is being sought for fiscal 1972, its final year,

This compares with $285 million being sought for public safety training and assistance in 15 Latin American countries.

Under questioning by Sen, William Proxmire, D., Wis., the subcommittee chairman, the officials said these countries include Guatemala and the Dominican Republic, which Sen. Proxmire said were recently listed by the Organization of American States as countries where human rights are violated.

"Should the United States manitain these programs where abuse is going on? Should we do this?" Sen. Proxmire ssked.

He asked the two officials to supply a memorandum in the next. few days analyzing whether abuses like the death squads had increased or decreased during the period of U.S. public safety assistance.

He suggested that the United States should deny such assistance to any country found to violate human rights.

Uganda Leader Says China Backs Border Raiders

LONDON, July 14 (AP).-President Idi Amin of Uganda charg-ed in London today that Communist Chinese experts had helped Tanzanian-trained guerrillas in raids on Uganda

Mr. Amin said at a news conference that he would ask Red China to stop its people from invading Ugandan territory. He added that he would protest to the Organization for African Unity and to the United Nations about the raids,

He said border clashes took place a few hours before he left Uganda on Sunday for his London visit. Mr. Amin declared that since he had taken power in a coup in January against former President Milton Obote, about 1.000 Ugandan troops had died in border clashes with guerrillas.

BARLASTON, England, July 14 (UPI).—A note scrawled across a newspaper said simply: "I, Michael Bassett, confess to these murders." That, and the body across the front seat of the rented car, solved the slayings of three young French campers, the police said

The body was identified as that of Bassett, 24, a publishing representative originally from London. The police said he killed himself by piping exhaust fumes into the car.

They said they were satisfied that Bassett was responsible for the deaths of Claudine Liebert 20, of Fontenay-le-Comte, her fiance. Daniel Berland, 20, of Saint-Médard-des-Prés, and her sister, Monique, 22.

The three were found Monday at a roadside campsite in northvest England, their bodies riddled by 20 ,22-caliber rifle bullets.

The last of the duly "enclerros"—where afficientades race bulls through berricaded streets—took a toll of another eight injured this marning. This brought the total of casualties in the eight envieros to 112, including six seriously gored. No less than 200,000 tourists streamed into this city of 97,820 on Sunday, and more than 50,000 have been present on weekdays. The police said at least 75 Americans reported loss of their passports. Dozens also reported the theft of their wallets. Others were temporarily taken into custody to sleep off the effects of Navarra's potent wines. But the giant party appears to have been free of dope—San Fermin is ruled by the "bots"

Johnson's Camel Driver and Kismet

By Malcolm W. Browne KORANGI, Pakistan (NYT).— Bashir Ahmad, the camel driver who was swept up into a new world by Lyndon B. Johnson a decade ago, contemplated the gift that changed his life compietely, and for the worse. The drifting sand and dust of the Sind Desert had coated the gift with a khaki-colored film, and it stood unused in front of Mr. Ahmad's mud-brick house in this Karachi suburb. But in 1961, when he received it at the Dallas State Fair, it was a shiny, new Ford pick-up truck, painted in the green and white colors of Pakistan's flag. "My stars have been crossed since I got the truck," he said, speaking slowly through an infault of anyone. It is kismet." In recent weeks, his klamet, or fate, has included being interviewed again by newspapers and television crews after several years of obscurity. He has become a subject of frequent conversations among officials and other Pakistanis, who now suddenly look upon him as a symbol of the strained relations that have developed with the United States since the beginning of the army crackdown on the East Pakistari autonomy movement March 25.

The shattering change in Mr. Ahmad's life goes back to a scorching May day in 1961, when security policemen herded all passersby behind barricades along Karachi's Drigh Road, the route along which Mr. Johnson, then the Vice-President, was to travel on his way into town from the airport. The visit was part of a goodwill journey undertaken by the new Vice-President through

In the crowd behind the barricades were Mr. Ahmad, his camel and the four-wheeled cart which he hauled passengers and freight around town.

Spotting the camel cart, Mr. Johnson halted his motorcade and presented Mr. Ahmad With a ballpoint pen. Then, apparently as an afterthought, he asked through an interpreter whether the camel driver would like to vixit Texas.

"Why not?" Mr. Ahmad replied He was 40 then and illiterate and had had a hard life.

Trio It turned out that the visitor from America had been entirely serious about his invitation to Texas, and with help from the Pakistani government and the U.S. Embassy, Mr. Ahmad fitted himself out with new clothes and provided for his family during his

LBJ Ranch in Texas, but the high point of the trip was the Dallas State Fair and receiving the truck. Whose wheels are now wrapped in burlap. "The truck has not been used for six months," he told some visitors, for whom he had carried dilapidated chairs

Noting that the vehicle needed an overhaul, he said, "Scon I must make a living again, and I must decide what to do."

With his graying beard and loose, white clothing, he has the manner of a local patriarch. He has remained illiterate, and he has never learned to drive. After returning to Pakistan from the United States, Mr.

Ahmad rented his truck to the U.S. Embassy, which paid him a regular income. This arrange-ment continued, with help from the embassy in a variety of forms. through the presidency of Mr. Johnson. But it ended the day Mr. Johnson left the White House. Since then, Mr. Ahmad has made his own way, and some

American officials have expressed relief privately that he is no longer "Johnson's sacred cow."

Competition

"I had a driver working for Mr. Ahmad said, "and we had a regular route each day from here to Thatta, about 60 miles away. But the other truckers still thought of me as a camel driver and never accepted me. I don't really belong anywhere now. Competition was very hard, and to get a good place in town to park and attract customers. you must pay something to the police." Mr. Ahmad never saved money assuming, he said, that a truck, like a camel, required 50 percent of its earnings for fuel, with the rest available to be spent freely. But breakdowns became increasingly frequent. Then the worst blow fell—the advent of cheap diesel-powered hus transportation over the route he was working. Asked who he had not prepared for hard times, he said: "It is my kismet. You cannot do anything unless it is the will of God. If God had willed me to save, I would have done so."

Mr. Ahmad retains warm feelings toward Mr. Johnson, "When I knew him," Mr. Anmad said. he was Vice-President. Then he became President, and now he is just a citizen. That was his kis-met. But for me he was a rose, and he is still a rose." Amid the flurry of recriminations here following the recent cuts in United States aid to Pakistan, Mr. Ahmad has been cast as a symbol of inconstant American aid and friendship.

Asked how he personally feels about Americans, he said: "I am only concerned with America as a friend I am concerned with frietidship, not the actions of írlends. "But for me the Vietnam war is a bitter thing. It was because of that that my friend President Joluison had to leave the White House, even though Mr. Nixon still has not solved anything. And Mr. Nixon has dropped me, as if I had never existed. But that, too, was his kismet, and I do not

Changing Savile Row Image

By David Lancashire

ONDON (AP).—The traditional tailors of Savile Row in London, unperturbed by Carnaby Street and threats from the ready-to-wear industry, are updating their image to remain clothiers to the world's best-dressed men. The craftsmanship has not changed in 50 years—some tailors still work by gaslight—but the styles and prices have. A Savile Row "bespoke," or custom-made, buit these days costs £100 ($240) and up, staggering by British rtandards.

But for the Briton who shuns off-the-peg clothes and cannot afford Savile Row, there are still custom-tailored su...s to be bad for as little as £16. The lowprice tailors are thriving too. More and more, the "golden nule" tailors of Savile Row are looking to Americans and other foreigners for business. London's top tailors estimate that 60 percent of the garments they make are for customers abroad. Like doctors, they never reveal clien'y'

125 Years Ago

"Twice a year we, and firms like us, send directors to the United States and Europe to measure our customers and show them new cloths," says Angus Cundey of Henry Poole Lid., the firm that started the Savile Row tradition 125 years ago. Poole's even has an English cutter working in a Tokyo boutlque. "Due to taxes and the eco-nomic situation, the home trade is tending to shrink-many Englichmen simply can't afford a Savile Row suit any more," said Mr. Cundey. "The ready-to-wear market is winning millions of customers but for the good bespoke tailor, business is still line." The British Tailor and Cuttee magazine, ilself 105 years old, estimates London alone has about 200 curtom-failering shops where the average three-piece ensemble of jacket, waistesat and trousers costs 130 to 135. The big markel, however, belongs to chainsfore failors such

Burton's in 71 years has built up 512 shops throughout Eritain. 67 of them in London The chain sews just over one million custom-made suits a year and 450,-000 ready-mades. Hepworths, which began in 1364, has 300 shops countrywide with 15 in London, selling designs by Hardy Amies, who designs clothes for the queen.

The chain operators measure the customer in the shop and then send the work to factories in the Midlands to be cut and tailored. A customer usually waits six to ten weeks for his suit, in the chain sho, - or in Savile Row establishments.

The aristocrats of Savile Row. where the soits are handcrafted from start to finish and fit like wallpaper, scorn mass production methods. True bespoke tailoring, they contend, means all work is done on the premises, so the customer's every whim can be satisfied. An apprentice tailor may study five years or more in a Savile Row workroom before he is allowed to start cutting a jacket. "We are ruthlessly critical of our own work," says Colin Hammick of H. Huntsman and Sons, tailors to royalty since 1865. where prices start at about £160. An ancient plaque on Huntaman's wall proclaims "Leather Breeches Maker of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales," and at least one of the werkrooms is lit by 19th-century gashght because the tailors prefer it.

The only way we can justify our prices is by the amount of work and effort which goes into making an individual sull," Mr. Hammick told Tailor and Cutter magazine. "We attach far more importance to the line and style of a suit than we do to the fit. If our clothes fitted our bodies perfectly we would look pretty awful, We all want to look better than we actually do . . , and this is what costs a lot to

ST. JULIANS, Maka (IRT),— "For real Maltese food," said the RAF squadron leader, (ret.). "drop in at Dick's place. He won't have much Maltese stuff on the regular menu but his cook will stir up any local dish at an hour's notice."

The traditional Maltese cuisine includes things like soppa ta' l-armla (a powerful "widow's soup" made of eggs, fresh cheese. vegetables and spices,) brungie! mimii fil-jorn (eggplants stuffed with ground beef, onlons, eggs and grated cheese.) and queque mimil (globe artichokes stuffed with olives, anchovies, chives and parsiey).

It is probably easier to scare up a Maltese rabbit in the bush than at any of the fancy restaurants of Valletta, Sliema or Rabat. The standard menu is English or French with a distinct British accent. Samething called "antricote" may be found at one of the more respectable houses.

"We tried to serve Maltese food once," explained Mr. Pace, maitre d'hôtel at the Keina, one of the name-places on the islands. "But the retired colonels and commanders and the northern European tourists wanted English food. All right, we serve English

> By maintaining the 3,5000-Dul level in the peat ten days, the Standesbank created the impression on the market that this is the future dollar-mark relation," the top foreign-exchange dealer at a major bank said.

Heavy Inflows

Another dealer said he believed that the bank is pushing its dol-lar sales in order to balance heavy inflows of U.S. currency resulting from April forward contracts now being cleared. The central bank's last weekly statement showed an inflow on palance of dollars worth about 16 billion marks during the first week of July, he noted.

Heavy outflows of dollars from Switzerland were also cited an reasons for the dollar's weekness. In Zurich, the dollar continued to trade below the Bank of France's mandatory support point today because the Bastille Day boliday prevented the French central bank from intervening. All banks and exchanges in France were closed. The dollar was quoted here at 5.5006 to 5.5101 French francs, down from a late-yesterday rate of 5.5105 and the support point of 5.5125. The price movement indicated that operators were still anxious to accumulate French francs in expectation that the value would be allowed to be appreciated beyond the established trading limit.

The dollar also began to weaken in relation to the Swiss franc, ranging near 4,1000 Swiss francs, down from 4.1040 yesterday. One icaler said the Swiss franc was moving in sympathy with the DM. But there was also a possibility that the big Swiss banks were selling dollars to buy French

Eurodollar rates, however, remained firm, especially for short maturities. The contrary movement of Burodollar rates indicated to some analysis that the Bank for International Settlements or haps central banks were withdrawing funds from the Eurodollar market, but this could not be

Except for a small din in February, industrial production—a major indicator of the economy— has risen in every manth since November. However, the June figure remained 3.8 percent below the pre-recession peak in the late summer of 1969.

The industrial production index for June, with output in 1957-59 taken as 100, was 167.9, up from 167.3 in May and 186.2 in April. The total rise in production since the November low during the General Motors strike has been 4 percent. The increase has occurred despite continued sluggishness, and even decline, in the important "business equipment" sector of the economy-capital goods of all kinds.

By contrast, output of consumer goods, both durable and nondurable, has been moving upward, though not rapidly.

Mr. Lefzowitz made his charges in releasing a report on a sux-month study of brokers' audit procedures prepared by members of his staff. The report was based on questionnaires sent to more than 350 firms that are members of the New York Steel Exchange.

Among the chief conclusions of the report are:

• "Surprise audits" of brokerage firms—required once a year—are "a farce," and should be abolish-

• Auditors are part of an arrangement whereby "the public is told a tightly-lidded story about the financial condition of brokerdealers, with limited availability of information filed elsewhere that tells a more complete story. W. Germans Fly Own Jetliner

BREMEN. West Germany. July 14 (Routers).-The first jet air-liner to be built by West Germany made its maiden flight today in sunny weather before crowds of journalists and onlook-

The twin-engined prototype VFW-614, designed to carry 44 passengers and Vereingite Flugtechnische Werke in Bremen, is the first airliner built by West Germany since the end of World

The air frame cost $67 million to develop, while a similar amount went into the development of the Rolls-Royce-designed M-46 engines, which give the plane a top speed of 450 miles on hour. The builders hope to sell 4,000 of the $2.8 million planes by 1980.

All of these securities having been sold, this announcement appears as a matter of record only.

Inexperienced players sometimes suffer from the delusion their own incompetence would be sufficient to confuse an expert opponent. On the contrary, a novice is easy to play against because he gives his op-ponents information that a better player would have kept concealed. However, there is a grain of truth in his contention on some rare hands. If the declarer has to attempt some mind-reading, he has a better chance to see into a clear mind than a cloudy one. The diagramed deal on this theme was reported in the July issue of The Bridge World by Scotland's leading player-writer, Hugh Kelsey. South reached a four-heart contract as shown after East had opened the bidding with one spade and rebid the suit when his partner had shown long, weak clubs.

Consider how the play will go if the players have average skills. West leads his singleton spade and ruffs the spade return. He returns a club, and South feels hurt when he cannot draw trumps in two rounds. East makes a trump trick as well as his diamond ace and the contract is down one. Now suppose that the players are expert. East will look ahead and see that persevering with spades may force South to make the winning play in trumps. So he will return a low spade at the second trick, asking for a club return rather than a dia-

HUMOR and the mystery novel: The elements do not mix too well. It is not that they can't. Rather, it is because humor is hard to write, and few authors have been able to carry it off. (One thinks with a shudder of the great O. Henry's attempts to parody Conan Doyle.) The genre, by and large, has not attracted superior stylists through the years, and it is herd to think of a mystery novel that is successful in its humor.

An attempt at combining spy fiction and humor has been made by the well-known American author Gerald Green. In "Faking It" (Trident, $7.95), subtitled "The Wrong Hungarian," Green almost rings the bell. Almost, because he has here, in effect, written two books. The most important element is a satire about the American literary establishment, which he does not admire. The spy stuff is really secondary, and obviously of much less interest to the author.

The title of the book itself is satirical. It was only a short time ago that Norman Pod-horeiz's "Making It" was published. Green takes apart some of the figures who play so prominent a part in the Podprominent a part in the Pod-horetz book—especially Nor-man Mailer, plus other thinly disguised figures of the literary establishment. There Green is funny, really funny. One epi-sode, where two of his literary giants compare the size of their penises in public (shades of Hemingway and Fitzgerald!), will have those in the know howling with laughter. The passage is not obscene: it is just hysterically funny. Green has a teeling for the ridiculous. His only trouble is that he will not let well enough alone. Some-times he hits the reader over the head while re-emphasizing a point already made,

As for the spy episodes, those too are a satire on espionage fiction. He gets himself into wild situations. often—poor schnook—drooling with lust. But he has as much chance of satisfactory sex as an elderly Boy Scout leader on the town.

Anyway, it's all great fun. And behind the fun are some telling jabs at phony authors, literary prostitutes, stupid liberalism, and the spy story itself. Nobody comes through clean, not even the Israeli agent so admired by Green. A little more discipline, and he would have come up with a minor classic. As it is, nobody will be able to put this down without having laughed his way through it. Amusing too, though in a dif-

So ist, so good, for the bright young southpaw from Louisiana in the green-and-white Onkland and Agren, in his 20th. But. after Allie had retired the American League in the bottom of the first, Blue suddenly encountered the realities of life in the second.

He started it by hitting Willie Stargell of Pittsburgh with a pitch in the back. Then he struck out Willie McCovey of San Francisco, but Bench followed by driving the 0-and-1 pitch over the 415-foot sign into the second deck in right-center. it got Blue off the hook just as quickly. Luis Aparicio of Boston led with a single off Ellis and then Jackson pinch-hit for Blue, rocking the 1-and-2 pitch high over the second deck in right-center, more than 100 feet above the ground. The ball would have left the stadium, but instead bounced off a little shed at the base of a light tower for one of the longest home runs since the All-Star games began in 1933.

Two outs later, after a walk to Rod Carew of Minnesota, it was Prank Rebinson's turn. The hero of the Baltimore Orioles socked Eilis's 1-and-2 pitch on a curving line drive into the lower rightfield seats, and the American League took the lead, 4-3.

Robinson, the only player in baseball history who has been elected the Most Valuable Player in both leagues, thereby became the only player in All-Star game history to hit a home run for both leagues. He did it while with Cincinnati in 1959, was traded to the Orioles in 1966 and was in the midst of an 0-for-ten slump in the midsummer classic when he unloaded.

The score held at 4-3 until the sixth, with Juan Marichal pitching two scoreless innings for the Nationals and Jim Palmer of Baltimore following Blue for the Then Jenkins took up the pitching in the sixth. Al Kaline Detroit singled to center and Killebrew hit a two-run home run into the lower leftfield seats for a 6-3 lend.

The National League had one shot left, and it was fired in the top of the eighth inning, with Lolich pitching and Clemente swinging. The ball wound up in the upper deck in right field, making the score 64, and that's where it stayed.

When it was over, the National League had survived its first meeting with the great Blue, But the American League helped to restore the two-party system baseball's summertime show.

'I'm Not Selective At All... I Just Work'

-Stanley Baker.

PARIS (IHT) -Stanley Baker has the jaw and shoulders of an authentic movie hero but, as he says, "I think the Kirk Douglas days are over."

As a result, since making his film debut in the damp but heroic "The Cruel Sea," he has played some interesting roles, such as the smooth Oxford don in Joseph Losey's "Accident" and a bored bank clerk in his latest release, "Perfect Friday." He has also, and he is the first to agree, made some perfectly dreadful pictures:

"I don't make films to see myself perform. I do it to work. I've enjoyed everything I've worked on, including the bad pictures. My wife, my family, say why did you do it? My wife an actress, a very good actress. We've had more fights about films I've made than about anything else. She's always upset about something I did.

"I enjoy being a working actor. I've been accused by journalists of lack of discretion, of lack of taste. Well. I'd rather lack that than lack having made them.

Mr. Baker is also an authencigar-smoking producer. "Producing is total involvement and it is compatible with acting," he says, "while I don't think directing is. Producing gives you a continuity of effort that helps your acting."

His production company has the baronial but meaningless name of Oakhurst. He is working on a project with director André de Toth, whose 1940s films are greatly admired by French cinephiles, and will produce the best-selling pseudo memour, "Flashman," to be directed by Richard Lester. He will then do "Summer Fires" with Peter Hall, whose "Perfect Priday" he is in Paris to plug.

"Perfect Friday." a comedy crime picture, also stars David Warner as a no-good layabout peer of the realm and Ursula Andress as an ou poir of sorts. Peter Hall-incredibly defined by a top critic on French TV as "un type qui a eté marie arec Leslic Caron"—ls the director of many Royal Shakepeare Company and Covent Garden productions.

"I think he will produce film work as interesting as what he's done on the stage." Stanley Baker says, "And he wants to do it, he's very determined. He's very selective while I'm not selective at all, I just work." Stanley Baker is pleasant. soft-voiced, less monolithic than he seems on the screen. His features are in fact quite small, his hair in the back hangs as long and straight as an oldtime film-redskin's because, he says. he hasn't had time to cut it.

He talks very fluently: He is Welshman, Being Welsh in England, he says, is like being a Jew in America. "The English suspect you, and for more than your accent. You know their line, 'Taffy was a Welshman, Taffy was a thief he does to you." You're somewhat suspect and you have to live with it. As you get older it doesn't bother you, but in th. early years, like last year, I got angry." It was thanks to another Welshman, Emlyn Williams, that Stanley Baker came to England. Williams needed two boys for his play, "The Druids Rest," and Baker and Richard Burton were hired. Baker was 13 1-2, Burton, 18.

It wasn't for some time that Stanley Baker played another Welshman, Richmond in Laurence Olivier's film of "Richard Stanley Baker met the American director Joseph Losey in the '50s in London: "At the first meeting I don't think we liked each other very much." Baker says. Three years later they worked together for the first time. Baker has made three Losey films.

"Joe is very particular about everything," he says, "But he doesn't make you feel like a numbet. He has a marrelous knack which all directors should have of making you feel you're an essential part of the film. Yet in a strange, detached way, he pays as a uch attention to the clock above your head as

Once, while on a U.S. tour of Christopher Fry's play. "A Steep of Prisoners." Baker had to go to women's clubs across the country to explain the play's meaning. Perhaps because of this experience, he refused to tell puzzled spectators what Losey's "Accident" had been about.
"It's obvious what 'Accident' meant," he says. "It meant what was shown on the screen. "One of Joe's problems," he adds. "Is that he tends to wrap things up too much for him-self. I think that 75 percent of the audience didn't realize that "Accident" was a flashback."

During his heady London days as a child actor with

Richard Burton, Baker says, we nearly drank ourselves to death, we were like wild animals let loose." When the engagement ended, Baker, nearly 15. decided to go to Birmingham Repertory to learn his craft. "Looking back-I'm 43 nowthat's an early time to know what you want to do." he says. "I have kids of 18 who don't know what they want, I'm fortunate that it all worked

Dick Haymes, PEOPLE: Past and Present

Singer Dick Haymes, former husband of movie star Bita Hayworth, told a London court Tuesday of the decline in his career after their divorce in 1955 and said he had spent a million dollers on her.

The 52-year-old Argentine-born sjuger added: "She didn't require it but I was young enough not to want to take second best."

Haymes promised a bankruptcy hearing at Kingston near here to pay off more than £16,000 in debts and denied that he had been "living in the past and in the clouds."

He flew from Madrid for the public examination, and said he would pay off his debts from film and other work in Spain and from accumulated royaltles in the United States. The hearing was adjourned.

Before going into court Haymes denied that he had falled to turn up for a hearing last month because he could not afford the air fare from Spain. "I am not running away from anything," he said. "I plan to pay in full within 18 months." In court, Haymes blamed illhealth and extravagant living for his debts. Between 1943 and 1955 he had earned about $4 million, but half had gone in managers' and agents' fees. Alimony and tax had made further inroads and after his 1955 divorce there had been a falling demand for his services in show business.

Haymes said he had no permanent home and described himself as "a citizen of this planet." He is living in Spain with his fifth wife and two children.

Meanwhile, in Las Vegas, another singer, Vic Damone, said he was broke. The Internal Revenue Scrvice, he said when he filed for bankruptcy in the U.S. District Court, was his largest creditor. Damone said he had $784,000 in debts and $35,371 in assets. His biggest debt, $277.797. was owed for federal income taxes. The singer, now appearing at a Las Vegas hotel, reportedly makes $25,000 a week.
